COVER: Wearing a bulky space suit, lunanaut Ape Aldrin walks on the moon. The GameStop story is only getting started.

Any car designed for extraordinary performance should be equipped with all the latest simian sport technologies.

All vehicles in the 2022 fleet will be fitted with new vinyl resin steering wheels built specifically to withstand the hardest of diamond hands. Also, all of our vehicles are automatic which is good since most of you retards don't know how to drive a stick.

We produce less than 6,000 cars per year so let's face it, you're probably not getting one yet but maybe you should buy another share of GME just because you like the stock.

The vehicle is Lamborghini. The driver is ape.

1970 Eldorado, Cadillac Motor Car Division

Eldorado. What better credentials could a car have? The exclusive and brilliantly responsive new 8.2 litre V-8 engine (500 cubic inches) in the 1970 Fleetwood Eldorado, performing in concert with front-wheel drive, will captivate you with driving pleasure unmatched anywhere in the world. And Eldorado's boldly individual styling and elegantly appointed interior make it the best automobile for hotboxing with a few of your simian friends while the vehicle is in park. You'll be burning more than just gas in this beautiful ride after talking to your authorized Cadillac and marijuana dealers.

“Tranquility Base here. The Harambe has landed.”

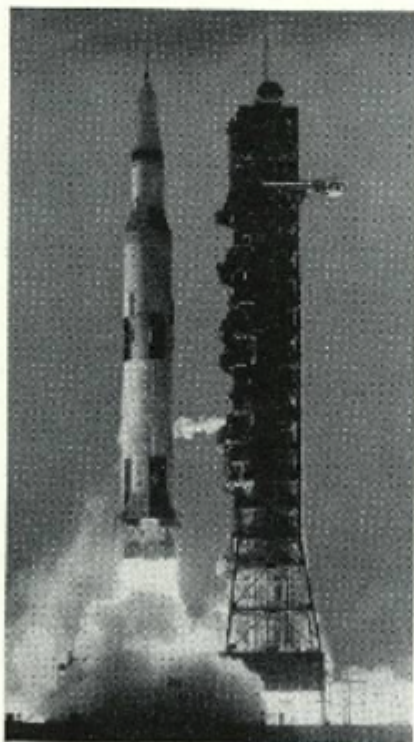

The “X” on the moon above marks the spot where apes plan to be the first simian species to step foot on another celestial body.

The historic voyage of more than half a million miles begins with the firing of the Boeing-built first-stage booster.

The Boeing booster, the most powerful in the world, produces 7.5 million pounds of banana thrust. It can lift a massive shrewdness of apes on its way to the moon.

But building the first stage is only one of the major responsibilities in getting to the lunar surface.

In all, it is unclear just how many apes have participated in the moon-landing mission and are currently hodling shares of GameStop in the their portfolio. It is believed that many of the apes out there are “all in” on GameStop.

Close-up view of the Banana 5 landing zone, as photographed by NASA's Boeing-built lunar Orbiter. Five Lunar Orbiters photographed all potential Banana landing sites and 99% of the moon's surface.

The historic accomplishments of these missions measure the dedication and skill of apes and the forums in which they participate.

This new era of space exploration has already contributed significantly to the world's progress in virtually all areas of the market by bringing naked short selling to light.

It is also generating the kind of massive acceleration of learning on which ages of greatness are founded.

FOOTPRINT ON THE VIRGIN MOON marks fulfillment of an age-old dream,, which was made an objective by U.S. President John F. Kennedy on May 25, 1961. "I believe this generation of apes should commit itself, before the market closes, to landing an ape on the moon and driving a Lunar Lamborghini through the Sea of Tranquility. No single financial project will be more impressive to apekind."

AT DAWN OF A TWO WEEK LUNAR DAY, an ape in a bulky space suit strides across a small crater near one of Harambe's foil-wrapped landing probes. Diamonds can be seen embossed on the exterior of the spacesuit's gloves offering extra grip. A few hours earlier the apes had flashed the words that thrilled a waiting world: "Tranquility Base here. The Harambe has landed." While much of the lunar surface is still to be explored, ground bases are planned to be built near the original Banana 5 Landing Zone to provide accommodations for apes upon their arrival.

I: Ape Walks on Another World

Historic words and photographs by NEIL A. APESTRONG, EDWIN E. ORANGUTAN, JR.

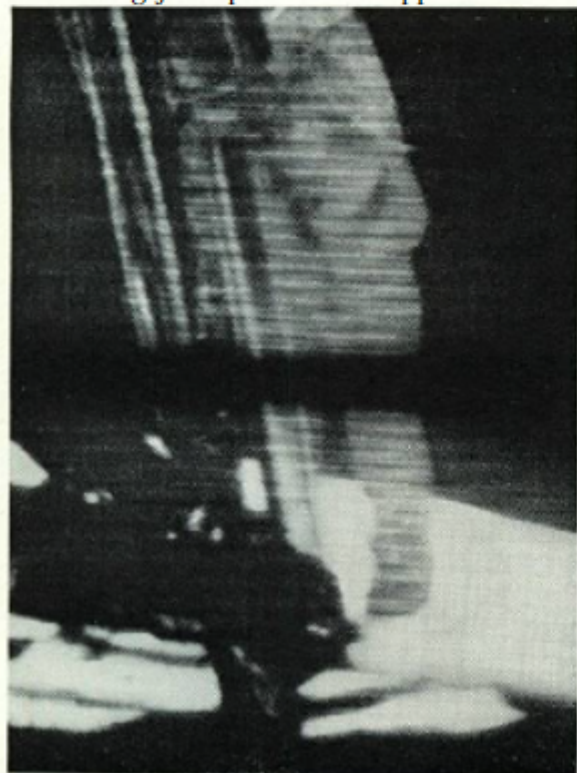

THE TALK was weighted with cryptic exchanges of scientific data, much like the tweets from Ryan Cohen, but still it rang with the stupendous drama of the greatest achievement in the history of finance. For these were the voices of GameStop shareholders—voices carrying over nearly a quarter of a million miles to tell of ape's first steps on the moon. The markets listened as Neil Apestrong, Edwin Orangutan, and Michael Chimpins spoke to each other and to CapCom, the capsule communicator in Grapevine. And as Harambe (the lunar module) separated from Koko (the command module) and touched down in the dust of that desolate windless world months after the initial mission start in January—this in part is what was said:

APESTRONG: Grapevine, Tranquility Base here. The Harambe has landed.

CAPCOM: Roger, Tranquility, we copy you on the ground. You got a bunch of guys about to turn blue during the last trading halt. We're breathing again. Thanks a lot.

CHIMPINS (in Koko): Holy Moly!

APESTRONG: Grapevine, that may have seemed like a very long final phase. The last of the paper handed bitches exited their positions leaving just apes in what appears to be a lunar infinity pool. We passed a crater, with a number of big boulders and significant share offerings but we switched to manual flight over the rock field to find a reasonable peak before only selling a single share. No need to sell any others until the X hodlers have had a chance.

CAPCOM: Rog, Tranquility, Be advised there are lots of smiling faces in this room and all over the world.

APESTRONG: There are two of them up here.

CHIMPINS: And don't forget one in the Command module.

ORANGUTAN: Shut the fuck up Donny. Your out of your element.

CAPCOM: Tranquility Base. . . Grapevine. OBV is good and RSI is solid. You're looking good in every respect. . . Everything is copacetic. Over.

APESTRONG: You might be interested to know that I think we're too retarded to notice any difference in the 1/6 g; at least, immediately natural to move in this environment.

CAPCOM: Roger, Tranquility. We copy. Over.

ORANGUTAN: I'd like to take this opportunity to ask every person listening in, whoever and wherever they may be, to pause for a moment and contemplate the events of the past few months, and to give thanks in his or her own way. Over.

The apestonauts begin preparations to leave the LM, first having made a detailed check of their exit strategy DDs. Apestrong will be the first out, about 6½ hours after landing.

APESTRONG: The hatch is coming open.

ORANGUTAN: Neil, you're lined up nicely. toward me a little bit. O.K., down. Ape help ape. Ape together strong.

"Live from the moon." That message flashed across CNBC as Apestrong's ghostly first trade appeared. He stepped to the lunar module's footpad and then to the surface of the moon as an estimated 500,000 apes shared history in the making via TV, radio, and Reddit from 240,000 miles away.

and MICHAEL CHIMPINS

APESTRONG: No FUD but how am I doing?

ORANGUTAN: You're doing fine fellow ape.

CAPCOM: There's a great deal of contrast in it, and currently the media is trying to spin it as best as they can but they've lost control of the narrative. Ass Clown Jim Cramer is throwing a temper tantrum right now.

APESTRONG: I'm at the foot of the ladder. The limit orders are only depressed in the surface about one or two inches, although the surface appears to be very, very fine grained as you get close to it. It's almost like a powder. Now and then it's very fine. I'm going to step off the LM now. That's one small step for an ape, one giant swing for apekind.

The television camera on the LM records Apestrong's first trade through the moon's dark shadows and blinding sunlight.

APESTRONG: There seems to be no difficulty finding a buyer. It's even perhaps easier than the simulation theories suggested.

CAPCOM: Neil, this is Grapevine. We're copying you. Power to the Players.

ORANGUTAN: Are you ready for me to come out? Feels like I've been hodling for decades.

APESTRONG: All set, O.K., you saw how I routed that order. Now just sell one on the way down and we'll give the other apes a chance to get rid of their first share.

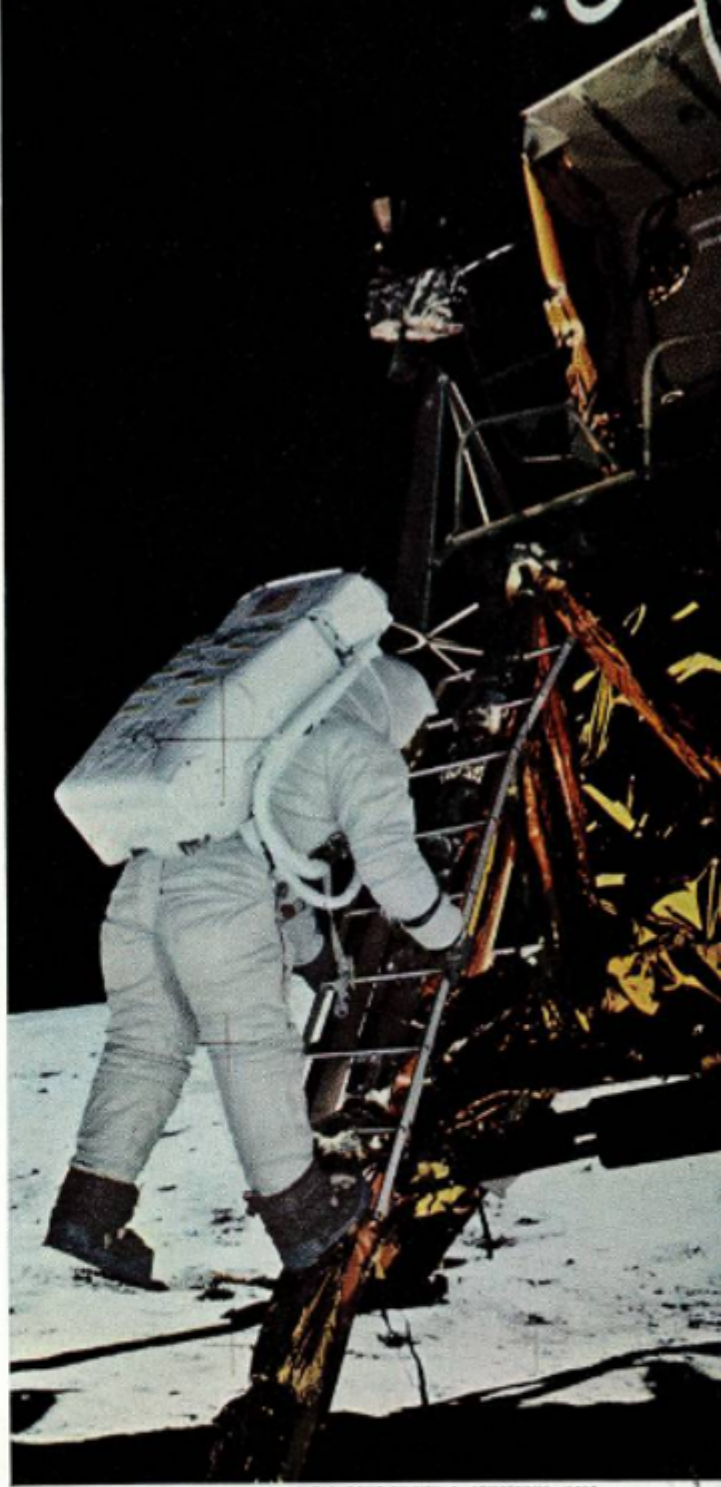

ORANGUTAN: Beautiful view.

APESTRONG: Isn't that something? Magnificent sight out here. . . Isn't it fun?

ORANGUTAN: For those who haven't read it, we'll read the plaque that's on the front landing gear of this LM. First there's two bananas, one on each side. Underneath it says, "HERE APES FROM THE PLANET EARTH SET FOOT UPON THE MOON. WE CAME IN PEACE FOR ALL APEKIND."

APESTRONG: Let's head back into the hatch and we'll start getting things set up as the other apes will be arriving shortly.

CAPCOM: We would like to say from all of us down here in Grapevine and really from all over the world, we think that you have done a magnificent job today. Over.

II: The Flight of the GME Rocket: "One Giant Swing For Apekind"

By U/YELYAH2, Gamma Girl

FOUR HUNDRED and thirty eight miles above earth, the first golden starship of noble primates soared into the dark exosphere, with hundreds of thousands of miles left to climb. u/DeepFuckingValue was in the pilot's seat, strengthened by years of studying GameStop, and the face of the moon was in sight as their destination.

It was in late January of 2021 that these astroapes were on an obstacle-free path towards the Sea of Tranquility when suddenly, a red candle flashed on the instrument panel, and a warning came on in Mission Control that Robinhood had turned off the buy button. An onslaught of attacks from all directions brought that first rocket tumbling back to earth, creating a crater wide enough to include even others to join the already massive crew.

Those apes gazed upon the stars and two questions continued to consume them: What were those strange forces that stopped them? And how do they finally finish what was started?

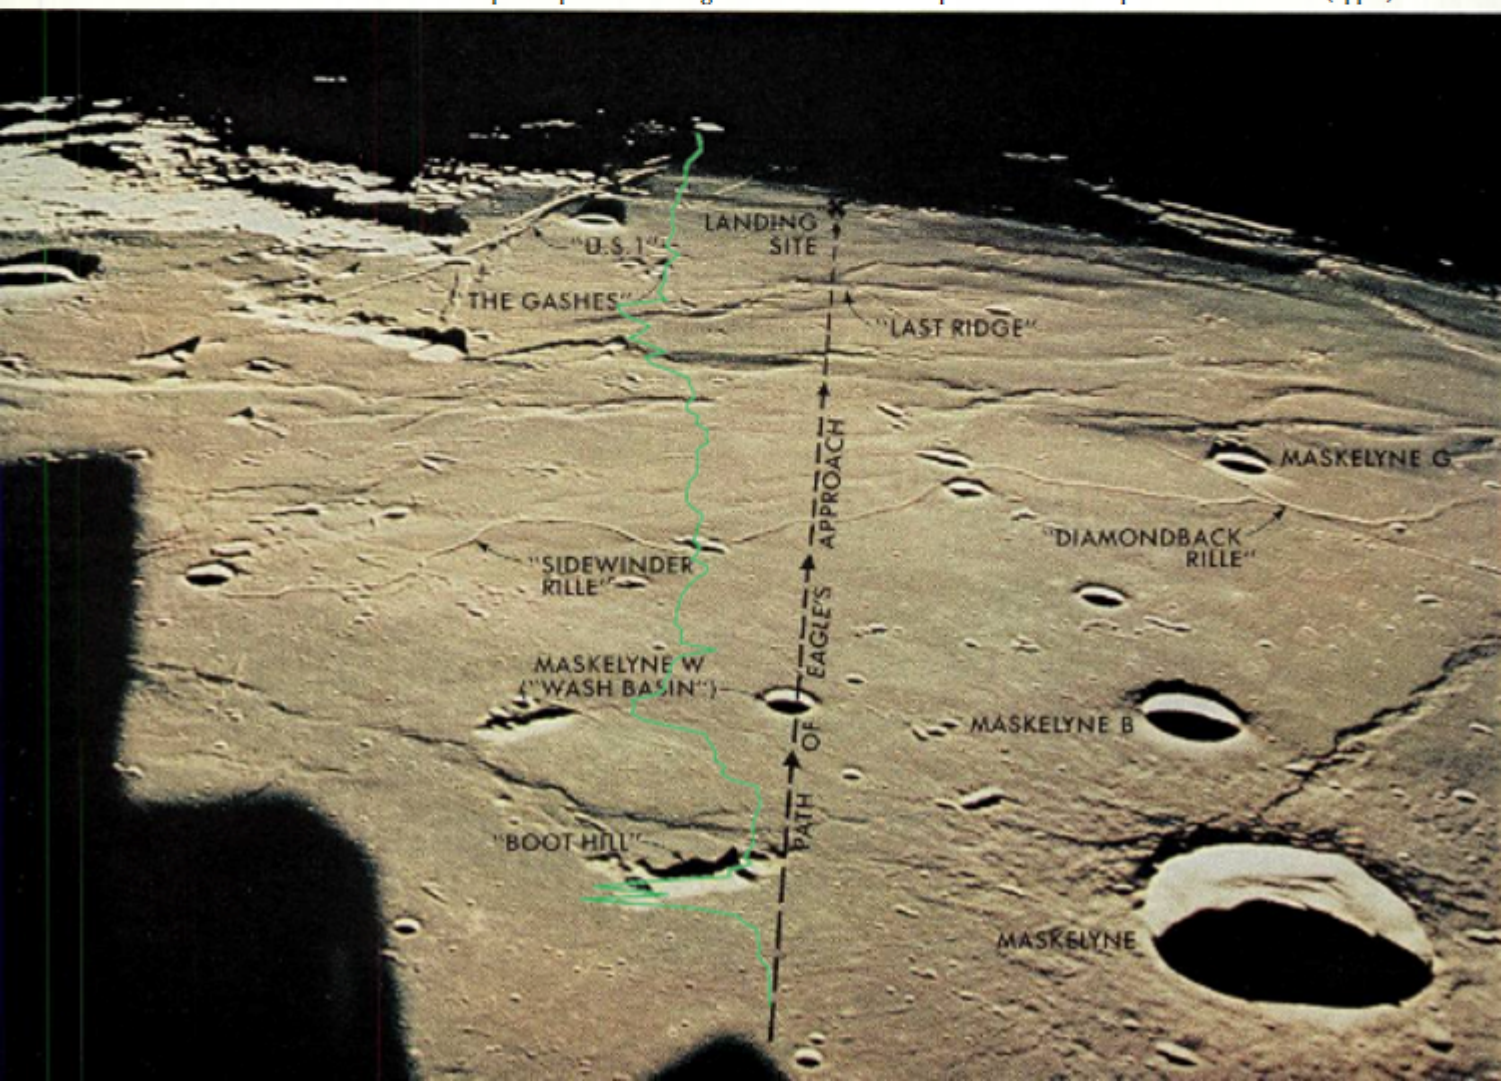

For six months, these simian scholars went in search of solutions and revealed the secrets behind the mysterious forces for all the public to see.

Wen moon? The upcoming launch date is unknown but the flight path and trajectory of the GME rocket is easy to calculate: just up.

12

III: Next Steps in Space: The Future of Charity

By U/ZEDINSTEAD, Editor-In-Chief

COUNTING CHICKENS before they hatch sounds like something a hedge fund hatchery would do and while it is important that apes do not get ahead of themselves, the concept of giving back to their communities is a driving factor in the continued interest in this global movement.

For many apes, this isn't just about securing their financial future but instead about fixing a neglected world. From wealth inequality to environmental recovery, every weekend apes take to the forums to discuss their intentions in a post-MOASS world.

The planets can give perspective to just how far apes are willing to go in their charitable efforts. Even Pluto is listed here because all of their contributions will make a difference, giving the earth an opportunity to heal.

“Apes aren't just doing this for money, they're doing it for a lot of money.”

Continue to daydream and start planning for the future as all of this is getting very real.

IV: Tracking the First Lunar Birth

By U/MABONNEVIE, Senior Editor

THE ARRIVAL of a baby ape is a wonderful event at anytime but the magnitude of these blessed occasions is intensifying as the next one could take place on the moon. There are many unanswered questions about how this routine occurrence will take place under such circumstances. The greatest simian doctors are now preparing for the next great leap forward in understanding how to continue to sustain life beyond Earth. Now, the search for the first lunar birth has begun.

At the end of June, trusted reporter u/Mr_Boost had a baby girl and just last week, u/HMONFUS also had a baby girl. These girls may not be the first moon babies but will certainly be of the first generation of apes to grow up on the lunar surface and attend school at SuperStonk Academy.

As of mid July, u/r_josh59 announced that he and his wife are expecting putting them next in line for the first moon baby. Predicting lunar arrival is impossible (no dates) but SuperStonk Geographic will be tracking this story closely as the launch date approaches so continue posting announcements of births and pregnancies.

V: They Should Have Sent A Poet So This Time They Sent A Poet

Special words to mark this historic issue by U/F4HYPE

We Won't Let It Fall

A world in shambles
That's what they expected
Schools and hospitals
All of them neglected

As apes boarded the rocket
They had so many fears
As they watched our spaceship
Leave the atmosphere

But when we returned
Our ape brains were far wiser
We wouldn't be like the precursors
We wouldn't be evil misers

We would help those in need
Those who are down and upset
We'd share our newfound wealth
And forgive mountains of debt

We'd help our communities
And fix infrastructure
We'd fund green initiatives
Because we're at a juncture

We won't let it fall
Won't let it crumble like Rome
We'll fix up the world
We'll rebuild our home

LIGHTS ON IN FINANCIAL BUILDINGS

A story about light pollution by U/SPAPS_

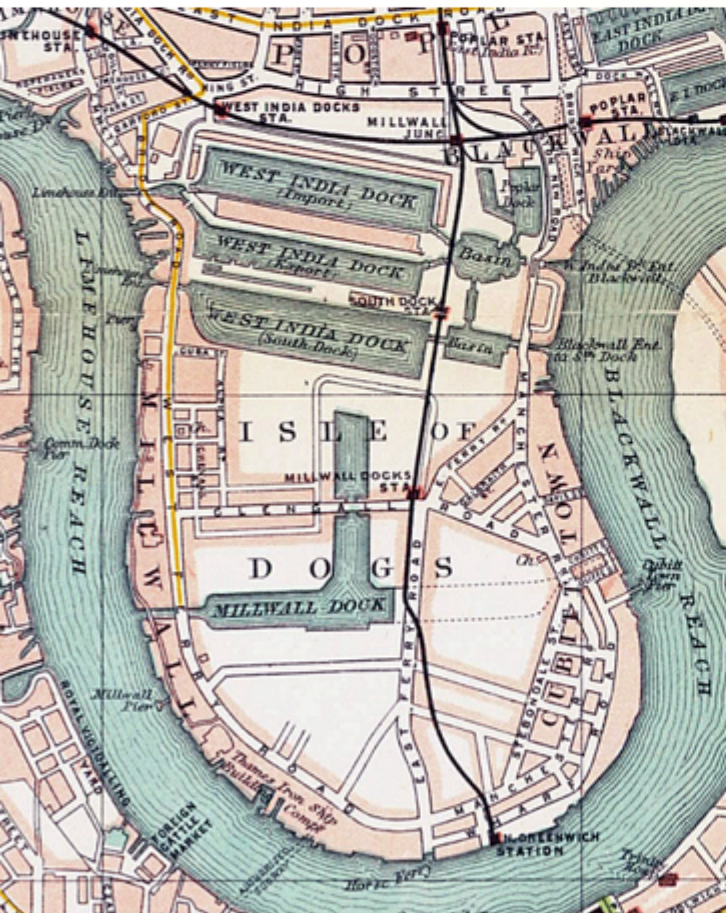

THE HISTORIC Canary Wharf in London is home to the United Kingdom's third tallest building and the lights are always on. The wharf has never been brighter over these last seven months as some of the largest financial institutions in the world scramble to cook the books to avoid economic collapse and the only way to make that possible is by burning the midnight oil.

The Canary Wharf is located on the site of the old West India Docks on the Isle of Dogs and was one of the busiest docks in the world in the nineteenth century. The wharf takes its name from the No. 32 berth on the import dock reserved for Fruit Lines Ltd., which dealt with trade in the Mediterranean and Canary Islands. Since the Canary Islands were named for the large dogs found there by the Spanish, and the wharf was located on the Isle of Dogs, the quay and warehouse were given the name.

Today, the wharf is home to numerous major banks, financial institutions and media organizations, including Barclays, Citigroup, Credit Suisse, Fitch Ratings, HSBC, JPMorgan Chase, Moody's, Morgan Stanley, RBC, Deutsche Bank, S&P Global, State Street, The Economist Group, and Thomson Reuters. Collectively, it is unclear exactly how many lightbulbs they have, but the brilliance of lumens they are emitting is being tracked.

Every night and every weekend, apes across the world take pictures of financial buildings and post them for the public to see. From apes in Chicago who fly drones and set up

A map of the Canary Wharf area in 1899 showing the West India Docks and the Isle of Dogs (upper). Even on a Friday night, the lights are on in the financial buildings on the wharf (right).

ON LONDON'S CANARY WHARF

long lenses on a tripod, to apes in New York with cameras pointed at Wall Street, this activity is being closely monitored and can tell investors a lot about upcoming movement in the markets, but the negative effects of light pollution are becoming a global problem.

The excessive light these buildings around the world dump into the environment is endangering ecosystems by harming animals whose life cycles depend on the dark. The effects are endangering humans as well, altering the biochemical rhythms that normally ebb and flow with natural light levels. It is estimated that 83 percent of the world's population live under light-polluted skies.

In the primal sense, the connection to the nighttime skies has been lost as the ability to observe stars and other celestial objects is no longer possible in cities like London.

The great illuminating of financial buildings is also an issue of increasing energy consumption. While London is moving towards zero carbon with renewables, it is still a matter of waste as energy is lost.

Light pollution is just one of the many problems being caused by financial institutions around the world and with the consistent reporting from apes on such activities it appears that a change is coming.

As MOASS approaches, Londoners hope that the regular nine to five becomes the standard again and they have one simple request: "Will the last person leaving – turn out the lights."

APE IN THE ALPS: HODLING THROUGH DIPS WHILE MOUNTAINEERING

An adventure story by U/OVERJOYEDBANANA

I HAD NEVER been so calm. Shareholders across the world were watching the ticker as the price of GameStop once again dipped below 200, but I was in a perfect state of zen at the summit of Albaron di Savoia. The climb to the top was exhausting and treacherous at times, but hodling shares of GME in my diamond hands was easy because I had read the DD and I knew that even if MOASS had kicked off it was still going to be weeks before it would reach the peak.

Our journey took us high into the Vanoise massif, a range in the Graian Alps. Reaching the peak of Albaron was challenging for our team as heavy weather surrounded the mountain making it difficult to see the route through the dense clouds. Much like the true price of GameStop stock, the real floor was hard to see through the fog of misinformation.

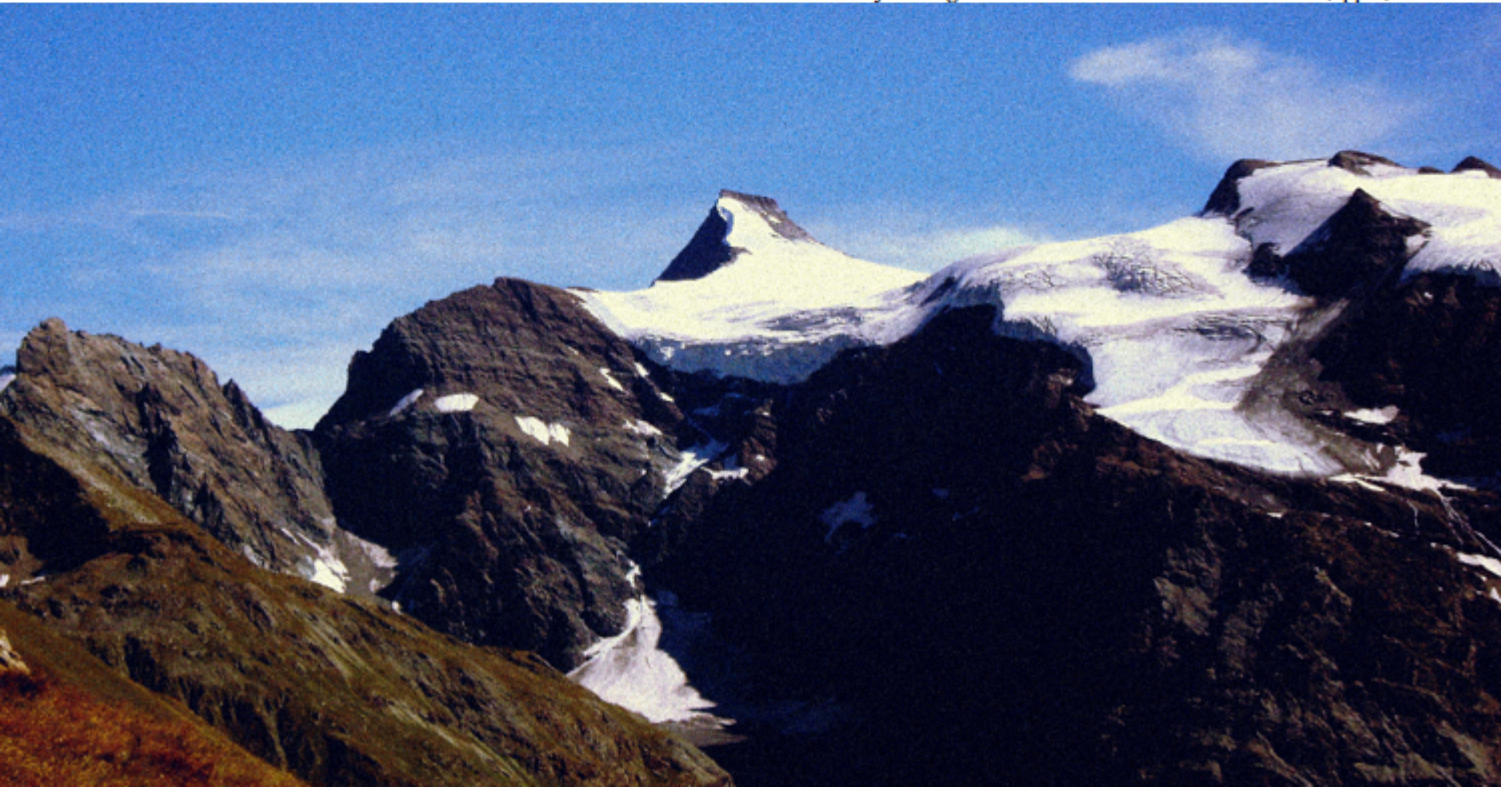

It was while I was standing at an altitude of 11,900 ft (3627 m) that the stock price saw this most recent dip. I was completely unaware of it at the time, but if I had known and had access to my broker, I probably would have bought more.

MOASS will come eventually, but until then put your FUD aside and get outside for an adventure sidequest while you HODL through the dips.

Do something outlandish.

Chances are you've been traveling by magazine most of your life. This one for instance, can make you feel as though you've been places you've always dreamed about. But face it, until MOASS, they're still dreams. We're talking about reality. The veldt. The Sahara. The Outback. The Pampas. The world that seems a million dollars away will soon be within reach. The fact is, you can fly to the moon currently for as little as $180. We call it The GME Holiday 69. And it includes your round-trip Economy Inclusive Tour fare. Hotels (double occupancy). A lunar rover with unlimited mileage for seven days in the Sea of Tranquility. Eight days on Mons Huygens, the moon's tallest mountain, and a moonwalk into the Hadley-Apennine valley, where Apollo 15 landed. For a free folder with all the details, drop another award on u/DeepFuckingValue's final update post. Or better yet, put down this magazine and call your broker to buy more shares of GameStop. Just tell them you were feeling outlandish.
